GOLF LINKS SLAYER-SUSPECT ELUDES POLICE

KLINE'S CUFFS AND BUTTONS IDENTIFIED

His Railroad Ticket Has Been Used to Rotterdam Junction

John Kline, alias Schidlofski, wanted on suspicion of having killed his wife on the Arlington Golf Club links, in Belmont, left Boston Thursday over the Fitchburg division of the Boston & Maine, the first coupon of his ticket to Los Angeles, good to Rotterdam Junction, having been taken up by the conductor and turned in to the auditor of passenger accounts in Boston.

This proves that he must have ridden almost, if not quite, to Rotterdam Junction, as the ticket would not be taken up until near the end of the division.

Chicago police met the train in that city, but Kline was not on board.

A photograph of the cuff button found at the scene of the crime has been identified as being that of one of the buttons that Kline wore.

The pattern of the cuffs found, a double blue stripe, is the same as that of the shirt worn by Kline when he left Brockton Wednesday.

Andrew Price of Brockton declares that Kline has been twice married before; once in St. Louis and once in Philadelphia.

John Porkus, of South Boston, also says that Kline has been married before, that Kline's wife disappeared, and that Kline said he had sent her back to Russia.

Winfield Scott, a fellow-employe of Kline, says that Kline carried a peculiar hunting knife, with a long, sharp blade, tapering to a point. Before this became known the police had abandoned the theory that the cuts on the woman's body were made by a razor, and decided they were made by a two-edged knife.

Brockton friends of the Klines say that the couple frequently quarrelled over money, because the wife would not give her husband all she had saved.

The entire savings of the couple were drawn from the Brockton Savings Bank Tuesday, and it is believed that it was this money that Kline showed on Thursday.

Kline is believed to have been infatuated with another woman, as on his return from visiting his brother in Abington he wore a woman's ring and refused to tell his wife anything about it.

For other news of the golf links murder see pages 2 and 3.

"I'll Get Even With Her."

Schidlofski once said to me: "My wife has cheated me so far, but I'll cheat her before long. She won't give me any money, but I'll get even with her."—Lawrence Royska, fellow boarder with Kline.

SOCIETY WOMAN FIGHTS FLAMES

Mrs. Andrew Robeson, a Brookline society leader, dressed in a dinner gown, fought a fire set by a lightning bolt in her home. The current ran along the electric wires, setting fire to the pantry. Leaving the dinner table, and followed by the members of her family, she located the fire before the firemen arrived, and is said to have even taken hold of one of the wires to tear it away from the wall.

The firemen were nearly two hours extinguishing the fire, owing to the fact that the flames were inside the woodwork.

WIDOW HEIR TO MILLION

AUBURN, ME., July 15.—Mrs. Nancy Hunt of this city has fallen heir to a large fortune through the death of her brother, A. P. Lovejoy of Jamesville, Wis. It is believed that her share will amount to a million. Mrs. Hunt is a widow.

The other heirs are Mr. Lovejoy's widow and children, and a brother, Alden Lovejoy of Roxbury, Mass.

FELL BLIND AND PARALYZED

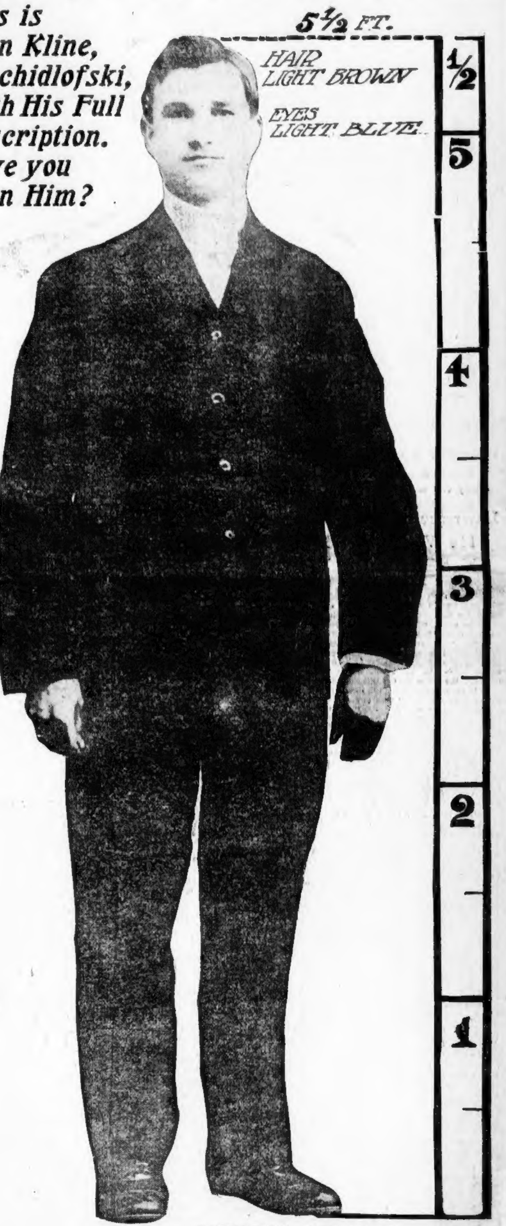
AUBURN, Me., July 14.—Howard Patterson's strange case is interesting physicians. Seemingly prostrated by heat while at work in a Lewiston shoe factory, he faltered at his work and fell forward, helpless, speechless and blind. The physicians soon found he was suffering with something more critical than heat prostration. He is blind and almost unconscious. Since the first he has been unable to speak intelligently.

Patterson came to Auburn from Bangor. Proprietor Curtis of the Main Hotel says he showed signs of mental trouble this morning. When the chambermaid entered his room she found him playing with chocolates at his table. He had about a dozen of them arranged in a circle on paper. In the circle was written: "Eat all of these; room 28," which was his room.

JEWELS FOUND ON WRECK VICTIM

NEW YORK, July 15.—Three bodies were recovered in the wreck of the steam yacht Normandie, which was sunk in a collision Tuesday night near Dobbs Ferry. They are Captain Storms, Engineer Gracie and Miss Gladys Dodge. On the fingers of the latter were jewels to the value of several thousand dollars.

This is John Kline, or Schidlofski, With His Full Description. Have you Seen Him?



WITTE ANGRY; MAY NOT BE PEACE ENVOY

ST. PETERSBURG, July 15.—It is believed here that the Czar has sent orders to Baron Rosen to make an explicit request through President Roosevelt for a cessation of hostilities before the peace conference meets.

While it was announced in the Official Messenger that M. Witte would be Russia's chief peace plenipotentiary and would leave on Wednesday next for Paris in order to sail July 26 from Cherbourg on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, a sensational report is now current that he may not go to Washington at all.

According to the report, his audience with the Czar last evening was anything but smooth. His Majesty resented M. Witte's plain-spoken ideas, and indicating that under the circumstances he would prefer that Baron Rosen should act as chief plenipotentiary.

The Emperor is even said to have intimated that Count Lamsdorff exceeded his authority in officially announcing to the Washington government that M. Witte should occupy the first position.

M. Witte is said to have left the Emperor in an ugly frame of mind, and to have frankly informed Count Lamsdorff that it would be impossible for him to undertake the mission.

It was only by the greatest effort, the story says, that the Foreign Minister succeeded in persuading him not to flatly refuse, and the question as to whether he will go to Washington is said to be still open.

Lawrence Royska Declares That Kline Said He Would Get Even with His Wife for Not Giving Him Money.

Although John Kline, alias Schidlofski, who is believed by the police to have murdered his wife, whose body, so mutilated as to be almost unrecognizable, was found on the links of the Arlington Golf Club in Belmont, has so far escaped capture, recent developments in the case have tightened the web of evidence that has been drawn about Kline and leave no doubt in the minds of the police that he is the murderer.

It is known that Kline left Boston, presumably on the 12:30 train on the Fitchburg Division of the Boston & Maine railroad, Thursday, having in his possession a through ticket for Los Angeles. A telegram was sent to the police of Chicago to meet the train in that city and arrest Kline if he could be found.

The train, which was about an hour late at Chicago, was met by the police, but Kline could not be found. That he was on the train when it left Boston is shown by the fact that the first coupon of his ticket, good to Rotterdam Junction, was taken up by the conductor and turned in at the Boston office on his return.

CUFF BUTTON LIKE KLINE'S.

One of the strongest links in the chain of evidence is the identification of the photograph of the cuff button found on the links as a duplicate of one of the pair Kline wore, by Lawrence Royska, who boards at the house of Mrs. Minekex, No. 98 Martland avenue, Brockton, where the Klines lived. Royska also said that Kline frequently wore a shirt with two double stripes of blue, a pattern similar to that of the cuffs found near the scene of the murder.

"That cuff button," said Royska to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter, referring to the published photograph, "is like the ones Schidlofski wore. I have seen them many times. He frequently wore a shirt of the same pattern as the cuffs found by the police.

"Schidlofski once said to me: 'My wife has cheated me so far, but I'll cheat her before long. She won't give me any money, but I'll get even with her.'"

Other persons in Brockton also recall the pattern of the shirt worn by Kline. P. K. Yakavonis, the expressman who took Kline's box and trunk from the Martland avenue house to the Montello railroad station on Wednesday afternoon, said:

WORE BLUE-STRIPED SHIRT.

"Schidlofski rode to the station on the wagon with me. He showed me two tickets for California and told me they cost him $142.

"He wore a shirt with two double stripes of blue that day. I had seen it often for I knew him quite well. I didn't notice whether or not he wore cuffs."

Mrs. Francis Stirbils, who accompanied Kline and his wife to Boston Wednesday afternoon and who returned to Brockton with Kline after leaving Mrs. Kline in the city to do some shopping, also declares that on that day he wore a shirt with two double stripes of blue. She did not remember whether he wore cuffs.

Friends of the Klines in Brockton believe that if he did kill his wife there was a double motive—money and another woman. Mrs. Minelkex, with whom the Klines lived, told a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter that Kline frequently had asked her to find out how much money his wife had, as she would not give him much.

The wife paid the bills for the two rooms and the board at Mrs. Minelkex's house with her own money. Kline did not support her, Mrs. Minelkex declares. Within a month after her wedding Mrs. Kline went to work as a servant in the family of J. G. Wilde in Brockton and remained there until last Saturday night.

QUARRELLED OVER MONEY.

When Kline was packing his belongings, preparatory to moving, as he said, to California, Mrs. Minelkex asked him why he was taking so many dishes.

"I may not take them much farther than the depot in Boston," he replied. "The devil only knows what I will do then."

The couple often quarrelled; usually about money. When they were first married, in February, they went to live at No. 51 West Ashland street, near Highland Park, Brockton. They quarrelled so frequently that the neighbors commented upon it and spoke to Mrs. Schidlofski about it. When they moved to Martland avenue, two months ago, Mrs. Schidlofski said: "Now there won't anybody up here know about our quarrelling."

In the Brockton Savings Bank there was a deposit of $341.50 to the joint account of John and Marciani Schidlofski. That was withdrawn last Tuesday. Mrs. Stephen Wallace of No. 51 West Ashland street, where the Schidlofskis formerly lived, said that shortly after the marriage the deposit to the credit of the wife was much more than that amount, and she knew that at one time Mrs. Schidlofski made over to her husband the sum of $250.

WOULD NOT GIVE HIM ALL.

"Schidlofski tried to make his wife give him the rest of the money," said Mrs. Walace, "but she refused. They quarrelled a good deal about that."

It is believed that the money that was drawn from the bank was what Kline had with him when he was in Boston Thursday, and which he showed when he called on Business Agent O'Donnell of the Barbers' Union.

P. K. Yakavonis, the expressman, who knew the Schidlofskis well, said that it was the general opinion among their friends at the time of the marriage, that Schidlofski married the woman for her money.

Miss Isabelle Schidlofski, who was a bridesmaid at the wedding, and who identified the body of the murdered woman, said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"Even before Marciani knew Schidlofski, she was anxious to be married. She was nearly thirty-six years of age and had no fellow. She was deeply in love with Schidlofski; she loved him as much as a woman could love a man. She loved him for himself, but I know that all he cared about was her money."

Has Been Twice Married.

Kline is said to have been twice married before his wedding in Brockton. Andrew Price, of Brockton, who knew him well, said:

"Schidlofski has been in this country nine years and has lived in Philadelphia and St. Louis. He was married in each city, but I do not know what became of his wives."

Brockton friends of the Cehidlofskis say that the husband was in love with some woman other than his wife and that this also caused frequent quarrels. He has a brother, Dominick, living in Abington, and went to visit him on Sunday, July 9. When he returned to Brockton he wore a woman's ring and he refused to tell his wife where he obtained it.

Joseph Porkus, a South Boston Polish tailor, also said that Schidloeska was previously married about eight years ago; that his first and only child died in infancy, and that soon after his wife disappeared and no one here nor any that have recently come from the old country have ever seen her or learned of her whereabouts.

"'I sent my wife back to Russia, she was sick,' Schidloeska told me," said Porkus.

"We always thought it very strange that Schidlofski's wife disappeared. This must have been at least six years ago. He never said anything to us about his wife for a long while, not even mentioned her, and finally, after she had been gone a long time I plucked up courage and asked him where his wife was, and he told me as I have told you."

KLINE CARRIED KNIFE.

The police have abandoned the theory that the woman's throat was cut with a razor, and now believe that the stab wounds and cuts on the body were made woth a two-edged knife. The cuts on the face, Chief Shaw says, in his opinion, could not have been made with a razor, while the marks on the woman's hands show cuts from both edges of the blade where she had evidently grasped it in her desperate struggle with her slayer.

That Kline always carried a knife was stated by Winfield Scott, a fellow-employe and Kline's chum.

"He often showed me the knife," said Scott. "It was of peculiar design and evidently of foreign manufacture. It had a blade a little more than three inches long, tapering to a sharp point, and was very keen. He told me once that he brought it with him from Russia."

The mystery of why Kline, if he committed the murder, selected the links of the Arlington Golf Club as the scene, and how the woman was lured there, is still as deep as ever.

It was thought that this was explained by the fact that Kline, under the name of Stanislas Polachek, had worked for Irving B. Frost, in Belmont, near the scene of the murder, and knew that section of the country thoroughly.

KLINE NOT POLACHEK.

This, however, has been exploded. Polachek and Schidlofski and different persons. Polachek has been found. He is at present employed by Walter Stanley of Belmont, and while working in a cabbage patch near the scene of the murder, lost his letters, he says. This accounts for the letters in Polish found by the police.

The slip of paper containing the address found in the pocketbook of the dead woman at Arlington was written by Mrs. Stephanie Schidlofska of No. 173 Ames street, Brockton, and given to the murdered woman on Tuesday night of this week. Mrs. Schidlofska had made the wedding dress of Mrs. Schidlofski last January, and it had become too small for her. Mrs. Schidlofski brought it back on Tuesday night to be fixed.

While in the house Mrs. Stephanie Schidlofski wrote her name and address on two slips of paper and gave one each to the husband and wife, in order that when they got to California they would know where to write to her. It is supposed that Schidlofski now has the other slip of paper with him.

MET HER AT DANCE.

It is believed that Schidlofski first met Marciana Spirgis at a dance in Boston, and was introduced to her. Then he went to Philadelphia, and, while there, wrote a letter to Charles Oksas, a grocer, at No. 80 Ames street, Brockton, inquiring if Marciani Spirgis lived in Brockton.

Oksas replied in the affirmative and sent Schidlofski her address. Schidlofski then wrote to Miss Spirgis, and the correspondence resulted in a meeting in Boston, at which time he told her that he would like to marry her.

It was learned that Schidlofski, when he first wrote to Miss Spirgis, signed himself "John Kline," and after a number of letters had passed between them he informed her of his right name, saying that he had taken the shorter name because it was more easy for Americans to understand and pronounce.

Said He Had a Job to Do Before Going West

I saw John on North Main street Wednesday afternoon. I was surprised to see him, as Charlie Greelish had told me that John left for California Sunday or Monday. I was so surprised that I asked him why he had not gone as he planned. He replied:

"I'VE A JOB TO DO BEFORE I GO AWAY. WHEN I'VE DONE IT I'LL GO TO CALIFORNIA."

He had a small bundle with him which looked as though he were carrying home some laundry. I asked him if his wife was going with him, and he told me:

"NO, I DON'T THINK SO. SHE DON'T WANT TO GO."—John Carley, friend of Kline.

KLINE USED TICKET TO ROTTERDAM, N. Y.

It is positively known that the Los Angeles ticket sold to the man supposed to be John Kline on Wednesday via the Boston & Maine, West Shore, Wabash and Santa Fe roads was used as far as Rotterdam Junction, N. Y., the western terminal of the Boston & Maine road, some miles above Troy.

The Boston to Rotterdam Junction coupon of the ticket was taken up by Conductor George W. Knowlton of Fitchburg division, Boston & Maine train, leaving the North Station at 12:50 p. m. and was turned in by him to the auditor of passenger accounts upon his return to this city Friday forenoon.

Conductor's Identification Positive.

Conductor Knowlton says his trainload was very light and that among the passengers was a young man who sat in the day coach next the smoker. This passenger had a tourist car berth ticket, numbered 14, and Mr. Knowlton sent the pullman car conductor forward for the ticket when the train was at Crescent, a town about twelve miles this side of Rotterdam Junction.

Asked if the passenger appeared nervous or if his manner was in any way noticeable, Mr. Knowlton replied in the negative.

Conductor Knowlton's recollection of the number of the berth ticket tallies with the number sold Kline at the railroad office in Boston, and Mr. Knowlton has no doubt that the passenger was the much-wanted man.

Kline had two pieces of baggage when he left Montello on Thursday. He checked a cheap trunk, with oval back, wood slats and a tin covering. This trunk was tied up with ropes. He also checked a long, plain wooden box which resembled a shoe case. The number of the trunk check was 16,938 and the check for the box was numbered 16,939. These pieces of baggage were checked last Wednesday and went on the 1:30 train from Montello for Boston. They were there transferred to the North Station, where new checks for them were obtained which will send the baggage direct to Los Angeles.

At the South Station there is a record of the transfer of the baggage to the North Station, and at the North Station it was said that baggage with the checks of the above numbers had been called for and rechecked through to Los Angeles. The baggage officials, however, refused to say what the new numbers for the baggage are.

B. & M. Officials Traced Ticket.

The conductor's coupon bears not only the mark of Conductor Knowlton's punch, but that of the baggageman who, at about 7 a. m. on Thursday, checked for its holder, Kline, the two pieces of baggage to Los Angeles.

On the reverse side of the coupon appears the stamp of the general passenger department of the Boston & Maine Railroad, and another stamp showing that the ticket was issued from the Boston & Maine office (West Shore) on July 13, 1905 (Thursday).

The ticket is marked second class, and is routed over the Boston & Maine, West Shore and Wabash railroads to Chicago, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe west of that city.

Officials of the Boston & Maine Railroad who became interested in the case yesterday caused an inquiry to be made among the employes of the outward baggage department, and this developed the fact that about 7 o'clock on Thursday morning a man supposed to be Kline presented two through tickets to Los Angeles and had a trunk and a box checked to that place, both tickets being punched with a "B C" by the baggage man in the usual way.

It was one of these tickets that later in the day was taken back to Agent Wilder of the Wabash office for redemption, and which was subsequently redeemed at the West Shore office, where it had originally been issued, at Mr. Wilder's request.

Wanted to Go Through Canada on Way West

Charles Tobey and myself were in the barber shop about three weeks ago, and saw Kline looking over some maps and time tables. He told us that he was going away, and wanted our help to map out a route for him to take to California.

He seemed to be very anxious to learn just how long it would take him to go and how long he would have to be in Canada.—William Cullinan, of South Braintree.

Kline Has Been Married Three Times in Nine Years

Kline was married three times in the nine years he was in this country—once in Philadelphia, once in St. Louis and in Brockton. I have been told this by Joseph Szymkaiwicz, who knew him well and who now lives in Somerville.

Szymkaiwicz told me when he found Schidlofski was about to marry the Brockton girl that he knew of his marriage to a St. Louis girl two years ago, and that Miss Spirgis should look out for him.

I warned the girl before she married Schidlofski that it would be his third marriage, but she was infatuated with the man and refused to believe anything against him.—Andrew Price, of Brockton.

KLIEN HAD $1,000 WITH HIM ON SATURDAY NIGHT

"Klien told me that he was going to California, but he said his wife was not going with him," said John Carley, a street car conductor, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter.

"About three weeks ago his brother, Charles Schidlofski, arrived from Russia and came to Braintree from New York. Whether he brought John any money or not I do not know, but on last Saturday night when he left work he had about $1,000 with him.

"Kline said he had an uncle in California and was going there to visit him."

With William Cullinan and Charles Tobey, Kline went over a railroad map about three weeks ago and told the two men how he intended going to California. He marked his route as from Boston to Quebec and Montreal and then to Chicago and Los Angeles.

TORN LETTER IS ELIMINATED FROM LIST OF CLUES

An owner has been found for the torn letter which was discovered in the woods near the scene of the murder. This eliminates it from the list of possible clues. The letter was found by Miss Alice Wynne of Belmont, who turned the tiny bits over to Clarence Hill, who in turn handed them to Chief Ryan.

James Brennan, who works at the Arlington Golf Club, notified the police that the letter was his. He received it Thursday, read it while on his way to work, and tore it up in the vicinity of where the crime had been committed.

The discovery of two envelopes not more than ten feet from the scene of the murder created a flurry of excitement for a while. It was found that one was addressed to Walter Frost, owner of a neighboring farm, and contained a post office money order receipt, and the other to one of Mr. Frost's farmhands, and contained a receipt from the employment office of Maurice E. Finn for a fee charged for securing him his position on the farm.

Dog Barks Furiously On Night of Murder

I have a dog here that actually knows more about the murderer than anybody on that night.

Nix, my dog, aroused our household at 2:30 o'clock on Thursday morning by furious barking. I did not mind it at first, but the dog became so crazy that I had to get up and let him out on the street.

When he got outdoors he yelped all the louder. He ran all over the neighborhood, and Mrs. Miller, who lives with us, looked out the window, but saw nobody. The dog barked as if he was jumping after somebody.—George H. Russell, who lives near scene of crime.

KLINE'S ROMANCE FOLLOWED GAY CHALLENGE AT A DANCE

"WHO WANTS TO GET MARRIED?" HE SHOUTED. "I DO," CRIED PRETTY MARCIANI SPIRGIS

Soon Afterward They Were Married and In Six Months Came the Tragedy That Startled All New England.

By Eleanor Ames.

THERE was a Polish dance in South Boston.

Madly the musicians played the weird gypsy music.

Faster and faster flew the feet of the dancers.

Laughter and song and light jest rose gayly above the sound of the music.

Pretty girls flashed coquettish glances at passing gallants, who claimed a dance in return for a glance.

The music, the lights, the excitement, went to the heads of the young people like wine.

It was the intoxication of mad merriment.

Suddenly there whirled into the centre of the room a good looking young fellow, with a devil-may-care expression on his laughing face.

"It's John Schidlofski!" whispered the dancers. "Listen, he's going to say something."

John Schidlofski raised his hand for attention.

"Who wants to get married?" he cried.

For a moment there was silence among the pretty girls, then a chorus of exclamations and shrill laughter.

One girl, Marchani Spirgis, the prettiest of them all, did not stop to exclaim nor to laugh.

Accepted the Challenge.

She danced merrily forth to meet the challenge.

"I do!" she cried earnestly.

Then the laughter grew louder and the chatter became more deafening, and the crowds surrounded John Schidlofski and Marciani Spirgis and congratulated them with mock courtesy and good-natured raillery, while they blushingly accepted the attentions.

Then they led the maddest, merriest dance on the programme.

That was six months ago.

Marciani Spirgis was from Brockton, twenty-eight years of age, pretty, attractive, of good repute.

John Schidlofski was a barber in South Braintree. He was considered a quiet, decent chap.

Sometimes he was known as John Kline, they said, because the name was easier for his friends to remember.

The courtship progressed rapidly.

Soon a license was issued for the marriage.

Then John Schidlofski and his wife settled down in a home of their own in Brockton, moving later to Braintree, that they might be nearer the husband's business.

The Sequel a Tragedy.

To-day, Marciani Spirgis Schidlofski lies dead; foully, brutally, fiendishly murdered, her poor body beaten to a pulp by stones, her head literally hacked off by a knife, her heart stabbed again and again.

And the police are looking for John Schidlofski, who hurriedly went away, saying to his employer: "Goodbye. I am going to California."

It is a murder no less mysterious than it is gruesome.

What was the motive back of so evil a deed?

Why should a bride of six months be found miles from her home in a lonely golf links, murdered after having been the victim of a frightful struggle?

Why should the murdered woman's husband leave his home and business, with the avowed intention of putting the continent between him and his past life?

Married people, sad though it be to confess it, often have quarrels.

But upon what possible subject could a quarrel be based which would so infuriate a man that he would beat his wife's head and face with great stones, gash her throat with a knife, cut her head almost off and drag her back and forth—over fences, over rough fields—and finally leave her in a mangled heap in a gully?

Could Have Had No Fear.

Evidently Marciani Schidlofski stood in no great fear of the man who so cruelly put her to death, else why would she have gone with him to so lonely and secluded a spot?

Why were they there, anyway?

It is not a place one would choose for an evening stroll.

There is nothing to attract any one but the loneliness.

Yet here two people—a man and a woman—did go, and here the woman met her death.

Robbery was not the motive, surely, for the woman's purse, her neck chain, various little trinkets were scattered about—mute witnesses of the tragedy, mute accusers of the murderer.

In six months of wedded life Marciani Schidlofski must have become fairly well acquainted with the man who so impetuously wooed and won her.

Did she find him loving, devoted, kind, respectful, considerate?

Or did he prove himself to be at heart a brute, who gave his wife blows instead of caresses, and curses instead of kisses?

Why Was Deed Done?

A full bottle of whiskey was found near the scene of the crime.

Was the murder the outcome of a drunken frenzy? If so, why, when the deed had been committed, was there not recourse to the whiskey as a nerve steadier?

The whole affair baffles analysis.

It is just another of the fiendish crimes which every now and then blacken the world's happenings.

It is another instance in which a woman has been slain, and where a horrible story has been kept secret by death-locked lips.

He Loved His Wife at First, Says Employer

Schidlofski always seemed to have plenty of money. He liked his wife very much at first, but later did not say so much about her. He rarely talked about himself.

Until Wednesday, July 5, he had not spoken to me about leaving. On that day he gave me his notice and told me where he was going. I cannot believe that he committed the crime.—Charles Greelish, of South Braintree, Kline's last employer.

KLINE PLANNED TRIP WEST 3 WEEKS AGO

The Braintrees were all agog with excitement when it was learned that the man suspected of the Arlington Golf Club murder—the most horrible which has taken place in Eastern Massachusetts in years—was John Schidlofski, commonly known in South Braintree as "John the Barber." Numbers of his friends were at first incredulous and doubtful, but later, when the full value of the clues in the chain of circumstantial evidence woven about his movements was made known, many statements hitherto thought of as trivial or forgotten for the time being were brought back to their minds.

A few there are in South Braintree who steadfastly refuse to believe that Schidlofski or "Kline," as he was better known, did the horrible deed. Although his most intimate friends confess that the evidence against him is almost conclusive, they cannot but believe that could he be found he could clear himself.

Employer Speaks Well of Him.

"It looks bad, but I can't believe it is true," said Charles Greelish, of No. 908 Washington street, South Braintree, by whom Kline was employed as a barber. "He was so quiet and unassuming. He never would say much unless he was spoken to. Not that he was surly, for he always spoke pleasantly. He was a temperate man, of steady habits, and apparently saved his money. He was a very fair workman, and was well liked by many of the patrons of my shop.

"I last saw John Saturday night when we closed the shop. He packed his kit at that time and took it with him; also taking a recommendation which I had written for him. He said then that he expected to leave immediately for Los Angeles, California, where he said he had a brother employed as a tailor.

"The story that I saw him Thursday night and that he came to the Brunswick Hotel to see me and to get the keys of the barber shop is untrue. I never gave out any such information and it is without any foundation, as I was at the pond here in South Braintree watching the officers drag for the body of the girl who was drowned here. I did not return to the hotel, where I live, until a very short time before the State police called upon me.

Always Had Money.

"Schidlofski always seemed to have plenty of money. He liked his wife very much at first, but later did not say so much about her. He rarely talked about himself. Until Wednesday, July 5, he had not spoken to me about leaving. On that day he gave me his notice and told me where he was going. I cannot believe that he committed the crime."

Common talk in the Braintrees is that Schidlofski left Philadelphia and came to Boston about eighteen months ago because of some trouble he had there. The story, as it went the rounds, was that Schidlofski was at one time threatened with arrest for assault with a dangerous weapon upon a fellow countryman in Philadelphia, and that he slashed the man twice with a razor. John Carley, one of Kline's most intimate friends, and Winfield Scott, an employe in the same barber shop with Kline, state that Kline told them of the happening in Philadelphia upon being questioned about the story.

"Kline, or, as I know him, Schidlofski," said Carley, "told me that he had a quarrel with a man in Philadelphia because the man called him names. Blows were exchanged and Kline then drew a razor which he carried in his pocket and cut the man twice. 'I cut him pretty bad, but he had no business to call me names. That is why I left Philadelphia,' said Kline. I hate to believe that he did this, but it looks a lot like it.

Had a Job to Do.

"I saw John on North Main street, near Ashland street, Wednesday afternoon. I was surprised to see him, as Charlie Greelish had told me that John left for California Sunday or Monday. I was so surprised that I asked him why he had not gone as he planned. He replied: 'I've a job to do before I go away. When I've done it I'll go to California.' He had a small bundle with him which looked as though he were carrying home some laundry. I asked him if his wife was going with him, and he told me: 'No, I don't think so. She don't want to go.'"

That Kline had a full pint bottle of whiskey in his pocket on Saturday night is vouched for by his employer, Greelish, who says that Kline showed him the whiskey and four bottles of beer, which he was to take home. Greelish did not notice the brand of the whiskey.

Proprietor W. S. Tracey of the Brunswick Hotel said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter: "Schidlofski as you call him, came to the hotel just about a year ago. He remained here until February 10 of this year, about six months. Then he left here and went to Brockton to live, saying that he was to be married. I have his signature as John Kline on the books of my hotel on the day he came here and the day he left, as well as several times in between. While he was here John was always very quiet, rarely having anything to do with the other guests of the hotel.

Not a Strong Man.

"He had few intimates outside of my boy, Leo, and a conductor on the Old Colony Street Railway, named Carley, I think. He was very regular in his habits. I never saw him under the influence of liquor during the entire time of his stay here. He was rarely out of the hotel late at night, and I do not think that he was out all night more than once or twice during his six months' stay. He was always courteous and pleasant when spoken to, but of a very retiring disposition. Although short and rather stout, he was, apparently, rather weak physically and no match for the men who managed to get him to fool with them. I cannot think that he has done this. It is not like him.

"Kline was to have called here this week for a letter of introduction from me to one William Lawson, a barber in Los Angeles, Cal., but he did not come for the letter."

Three weeks ago Monday Kline's brother arrived in Boston from New York, and went immediately to South Braintree to see the missing man. The barber shop was closed, and the young man then went to Brockton to see his brother. He explained that he was on his way to California, and had stopped to see if his brother would go with him.

To Go by Way of Canada.

William Cullinan and Charles Tobey, both of South Braintree, are positive that if Kline has gone to California he has gone via Canada. Cullinan said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter: "Charles Tobey and myself were in the barber shop about three weeks ago, and saw Kline looking over some maps and time tables. He told us that he was going away, and wanted our help to map out a route for him to take to California, as he was not able to read English very well.

"He asked us to look and see if there was any way that he could go through Canada to get to California in that way. We looked it up in the maps and time tables and found that he could go that way. He said that was the way he would go. He seemed to be very anxious to learn just how long it would take him to go and how long he would have to be in Canada."

"I saw Schidlofski as I always knew him, on the train about 5:40 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. He had two tickets for California, and a large roll of money, the outside bill of the roll being a $100 certificate," said Charles Dickerman of Union Road, South Braintree, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter.

Had Tickets for California.

Dickerman, who is employed in the finishing room of the W. L. Douglas shoe factory in Brockton, was a friend of the missing barber. He said: "I was returning from my work on Wednesday afternoon when Schidlofski came into the car I was in and spoke to me. He sat down in a seat beside me and gave the conductor a ticket for Boston. He had a dress suit case with him and said that he was going to Boston to stay over night and was to start for the West Thursday noon.

"He told me that his wife was waiting for him in Boston and that she was expecting him. In the course of our conversation he showed me two tickets for California. On the outside of the envelope were the figures $148, which I suppose is the price he paid for the tickets. He said they were second class. Then I noticed on the envelope: 'Take train at North Station about 12.30.'

"He told me that he had plenty of money to go to California and further if he wished to, and that he could also return without doing a bit of work and have money left when he came back.

"He was unusually talkative, but did not appear to be excited or to have anything on his mind any more than any person would have who was about to make a journey of that length. He told me that he bought the tickets at an agency on Washington street.

"I do not wish to believe that he did this awful crime, but it certainly appears as though he did. I could not identify the cuff links as his, although I know he wore gold ones."

Chase of Strange Man.

When the excitement was highest all sorts of rumors were current in and around Braintree and Weymouth. A number of the citizens of South Braintree, in the midst of a heavy downpour of rain, armed themselves and set out along the road to Randolph to discover, if possible, the identity of a man reported to have been seen about two miles along the road by two strangers driving in a carriage. The road was thoroughly searched from Randolph to the Braintrees, but without revealing any person more dangerous than a Russian Pole carring the remnants of a peddler's sack. He had sold out his goods and was hurrying to the nearest town to escape from the rain.

Kline Cut a Man with a Razor in Philadelphia

Kline, or, as I knew him, Schidlofski, told me that he had a quarrel with a man in Philadelphia because the man called him names. Blows were exchanged, and Kline then drew a razor which he carried in his pocket and cut the man twice.

"I cut him pretty bad, but he had no business to call me names. That's why I left Philadelphia," said Kline.—John Carley, friend of Kline, in Braintree.

MISS SCHIDLOFSKA SAYS THAT COUPLE QUARRELLED OFTEN

Miss Isabel Schidlofska, of Brockton, who identified the body of Marciani or "Bessie" Kline, also known as Marciani Schidlofski, throws much light upon the mystery of Mrs. Kline's murder by the story she tells of her and her husband's life. Although one of the missing barber's names is similar he is no relative of Miss Schidlofska.

Miss Schidlofska said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

By Isabel Schidlofska.

I WAS the bridesmaid at their wedding. It was at St. Rocho's Church, in Brockton, on February 19, last, and the Rev. Michael Ileza married them. The bride's name was Marciani Spirgis, but she was always known as "Bessie," sometimes as "Bessie Spring."

She had been employed in the laundry at the Brockton Hospital, and as a domestic in various families. All her friends liked her.

Was a Shoemaker Once.

John Kline, or Schidlofski, as he called himself, was a shoemaker once. At least he said he was. He came to Brockton about two years ago to see me, to see if we were related. We talked about our people and found we were not, but his family and ours became quite friendly. Then he went to Philadelphia to work.

While he was there he wrote a letter to Charles Oksas, a Montello grocer, asking him if he knew a girl named Marciani Spirgis, of whom he had heard. Again he wrote, saying he would like to marry her. He had never met her, so far as we know.

Finally he came to Boston and wrote to Bessie. She went to Boston and met him, and then he came here to see her, and they became engaged. He was a barber on Broadway, South Boston. We all supposed he had lived in Boston right up to the time of the marriage, in February, although to-day they say he had been living in Braintree.

They quarrelled a great deal, even before they were married. They quarrelled on their wedding day. It was Sunday, and he did not show up until half an hour before the time for the wedding. He would not make any explanation except that he was too busy to come before.

We heard he had a wife in Philadelphia. I don't know whether that is true or not.

Were Going to Los Angeles.

Last Tuesday night they called at our house and said they were going to Los Angeles the next day. He acted strangely. He wouldn't come into the house for quite a while, and hung around out of doors. He seemed surly. They said their address in Los Angeles would be No. 119 Figuroa street. That is the address of his brother, he said, who is a tailor.

My mother, Mrs. Stephanie Schidlofska, made Mrs. Kline's wedding dress. She had grown too stout for it, and had brought it over to get it altered. When she took it, Tuesday night, she said she expected to have a call to wear it in Los Angeles.

It was common knowledge to us that they quarrelled a great deal. She used to talk about it. She said she had $500 when they were married, and that he thought she had $2,000, and he had quarrelled a lot about that. Then she loaned $200 to a friend, who failed and never paid it, and he quarrelled with her about that.

I identified her to-day. Most of her face was not to be recognized; but I knew the shape of her chin and the prominent freckles—she had a great many—and the manner in which the gold filling was falling out of one or two of her teeth, as I had noticed only Tuesday night.

"SCOTTY" IN N. Y. SPLURGED $89.80 WORTH

First Newsboy to Sell Him a Paper Got Three Cents and Called Him a "Squnge."

WAITERS AND CABBIES SAD

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, July 15.—"You're a squnge."

This drastic accusation was fairly flung in the face of Scotty, of Death Valley.

The denunciation came from a small bathless boy who had almost broken his fair, young, mud-stained neck in the effort to be the first to flash a newspaper on the cowboy Croesus when he came out of the Herald Square hotel to-day. He afterwards indignantly stated that he had fully expected a $100 bill.

And Scotty gave him only three cents.

In his high, cultivated, "extra" voice Pietro Larnacari—such was the mad lad's name—cried to the Midas of Death Valley: "You're a squnge."

Instinctively Scotty's hand sought his pocket. But he didn't pull out any more money.

Can it be true? Is Scotty not to stand among us as a Niagara of gold? Will the bucket brigades all be called in? Is Scotty wearing padlocks on his pockets? Has he been counselled by Russell Sage?

But at any rate the careless coin spiller of Death Valley has suffered only a very mild attack of spenditis since he arrived in New York.

Even the newsboy called him a "squnge."

And to call a man a "squnge" is to call him a cheap sport.

Judge for yourself. Here are "Spendthrift Scotty's" squanderings for one day in New York. They figure up to $89.80.

To boys at Herald Square Hotel, $3; hansom and tip to driver, $10; wine at Waldorf-Astoria, $10; whiskey at Herald Square, $11.80; to messenger boy at Stock Exchange who picked up his hat, which he accidentally dropped over the rail, $5; keep of his "yaller" dog at a stable, $5; bar bills at Putnam House and New Grand Hotel, $5; meals and hotel expenses, $20; incidentals, $20; total, $89.80.

The jewelled collar that once adorned the neck of Goldbug has been taken off. Scotty said that as soon as Goldbug heard he was to accompany his master on the trip to Wall street he insisted upon this being done.

Scotty says:

"What did they expect? I'm a mush? I'm not feeding my money to hosses, and I ain't holding citizens up to shove it into their pockets. I'm just a Western boy with a wad, but I'm out to get value received."

Yet, Scotty admits the fact that when he drinks champagne it's "all for a bluff." When he is with friends his choice is "poison" or beer.

What's his game?

To boom Death Valley mining stocks?

Scotty howls at the idea that his special train and his flurry of big tips on the way here was done with any purpose save the thrilling joy of whirling out dollars on a pleasure stampede from his pay dirt reservation.

Anyway, it is a certainty that Scotty isn't advertising a tailor or a Bowery house or a patent medicine concern, or starting a boom for himself for the Presidency.

Thus far his extravagances here would not test the capacity of a cigar box, and no waiter, porter or cabby has fallen stricken with heart disease at the size of his tip.

Is Scotty a "squnge"?

POET TO FIGHT WOMAN'S SUIT

LYNN, July 15.—John H. Hutchinson, the aged and wealthy "Poet of High Rock," says he will fight to a finish the suit for $25,000 for breach of promise brought against him by Miss Ellen F. Wetherell, the well-known woman's suffragist.

Papers were filed in the case and Mr. Hutchinson's property attached for the $25,000. Mr. Hutchinson was engaged to Miss Vincent, a young musician, with whom he became infatuated, but this engagement has been called off.

"We were never other than brother and sister, engaged in the cause of human rights," Mr. Hutchinson declared relative to Miss Wetherell's alleged engagement with him.

"My engagement with Miss Vincent, I expect, is off," he continued. "She said it was, although the only notice she served on me was by publication."

The case will probably reach trial early in the Fall.

COURT FAVORS CHACE'S WIFE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 15.—The appellate division of the Supreme Court has handed down a decision in the habeas corpus proceedings on behalf of Henry C. Chase.

This old man has figured in a number of legal proceedings, ranging from applications to the court to obtain possession of his estate to being placed under a guardian as a person unfit to manage his property.

After the guardianship had been established Chace married a woman considerably his junior.

The guardian when the bride went out of the house locked the doors, preventing her from seeing her husband.

The court decided that Chace has been unlawfully deprived of his liberty, and directs the guardian to recognize the marriage and to permit Chace and his wife to live together.

JEWISH BAKERS GO ON STRIKE

Objecting to working twelve and thirteen hours a day, despite a ten-hour agreement their union has with their employers, 135 Hebrew bakers in the Hebrew Bakers' Union have gone on strike.

The strike affects about thirty shops that supply practically the entire Hebrew population with bread.

It is expected that the strike will be of short duration, as in the warm weather it is important to the master bakers that their baking be done as quickly as possible, in order that the bread and its ingredients shall not spoil. There are practically no non-union bakers in Boston. All efforts to hire out-of-town journeymen will be watched for closely by the strikers.

HEAVIES JUMP TO RESPOND TO CALL TO ARMS

Sprung as Surprise, But Assembly Made in Less Than 2½ Minutes

WILL BREAK CAMP TO-DAY

NEW BEDFORD, July 15.—Yesterday was an eventful day for the artillerymen of the First Heavies at Fort Rodman and one that will be long remembered by the battalion. At 9:30 o'clock a call to arms was sounded and immediately there was a scampering everywhere in camp. Some of the men were enjoying a bath, others were playing ball, while a few were lounging about the company streets when the call was sounded.

Notwithstanding all this, the assembly was made in the fast time of under two and a half minutes. Some of the men were scantily dressed but managed to reach their respective companies in time and the march from the company streets was on double quick. Battery D took station at battery Allston, B at battery Craig, K at battery Gaston, and C at battery Walcott, and at a given signal the batteries went through the manoeuvres of loading and firing at the imaginary enemy approaching the shore.

Quick Time Made.

The time taken of each battery in response to the call until the firing of the first shot was: D Battery, 8 minutes; B Battery, 5 minutes; K Batery, 6 minutes 30 seconds, and C Battery, at Wolcott, 9 minutes and 45 seconds. As Battery Wolcott is the longest distance from the camp and mounted with heavy guns, this time is considered excellent.

C battery carried off the honors in the competition for the Carpenter cups, winning by a comfortable margin from battery D. The winners' time for the 8-inch and 15-pounder attachments was 1 minute 56 9-10 seconds, D's time being 2 minutes 13 3-10 seconds. Battery K finished in the time of 2 minutes 49 seconds, while battery B withdrew after handling the 15-pounders, an accident to the 8-inch detachment causing their downfall.

A detail from Battery M of Fall River, in charge of Quartermaster Sergeant Davis, arrived in camp to superintend the affairs of the Fall River Battery, which arrives in camp to-day.

The second battalion strikes camp this forenoon and returned to Boston. They will be succeeded by the Cape battalion, which arrives this afternoon.

N. Y. SLEUTH ON OELRICHS CASE

Detective Sergeant Oppenheimer, of New York, is in Boston, said to be working on a clue to the whereabouts of the missing $15,000 worth of gems stolen from Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs, of New York, at her Newport home. He was in consultation with Chief Watts, of the Boston force, and at the close of the conference neither would say what the discussion was about.

Oppenheimer is the detective who a few days ago came here for Joe Kealy, alias Riley, who is charged with stealing more than $10,000 worth of jewelry from S. and D. Nathan, of New York. He is a sleuth with a reputation, and it is believed he can ferret out the thief.

A peculiar feature of the Oelrichs case is the fact that, although the thief took a great quanity of jewels from the Oelrichs mansion, he carefully avoided Mrs. Oelrichs's ruby engagement ring, valued very highly. The ring was with the other jewels, and could easily have been taken by the thief had he wanted it.

WOOD'S BODY CREMATED.

RECEIVER SUES OFFICERS OF DEFUNCT BANK

Charges Made of Mismanagement and Fraudulent Conduct in Central National.

OVER $300,000 INVOLVED

Boston financial circles have been thrown into a furor of excitement by a suit to recover from $300,000 to $500,000 of the funds of the defunct Central National Bank, brought by Receiver Frank D. Allen against every officer and member of the board of directors of the bank, by whose alleged mismanagement the bank was wrecked.

The suit was filed in the United States Circuit Court, and charges gross mismanagement, negligence, wrongful, fraudulent and collusive conduct while in office and wilful and persistent violation of the Federal statutes for the government of national banks.

The Central National was placed in the hands of a receiver Nov. 13, 1902, and since then Receiver Allen has been trying to make it pay 100 cents on the dollar. His investigations, together with those conducted by the Comptroller of the Currency, have revealed alleged cases of the grossest mismanagement.

Accused Are Prominent Men.

The men against whom the suits have been brought are well known in social and business circles. They are:

Otis H. Luke, who was president of the bank, a resident of Brookline; Charles H. Allen, president of the Home Savings Bank; David Loring, a well-known note broker; Edward P. Mason, of the Mason & Hamlin company; Howard L. Porter of Haverhill, a large shoe manufacturer; Moses W. Richardson, a capitalist, retired from active business, and Edmund H. Talbot, S. Reed Anthony and Warren B. P. Weeks, executors of the estate of the late Andrew G. Weeks, who was a member of the board of directors with the others named.

President Luke is charged with being incompetent to perform the duties of president, untrustworthy and unfit to conduct the business of the bank. The directors are charged of having permitted him to control and direct the affairs of the bank, and to loan its funds without security to himself and other members of his family.

Receiver Allen charges that the directors wilfully falsified in their reports of the condition of the bank to the comptroller of currency. It is charged they procured J. Adams Brown, cashier of the bank, to bid up the stock at a public sale, so the bank's credit might not be affected.

Firms Said to Have Gained.

Among the concerns and individuals mentioned as having profited by the mismanagement and collusion on the part of the directors are: Frank G. Coburn and F. G. Coburn & Company, to whom money was loaned in excess of the statutory limitation and without sufficient security on notes indorsed by Pres. Luke; Damon Safe and Iron Company, Emery Bemis & Company, the Bemis & Diamond Company, the Emery Bemis Company and the United States Sumatra Tobacco Growing Company, to which loans were made aggregating $82,648.32, although in the opinion of the receiver these companies represented the business of one concern; F. P. Morton Cigar Manufacturing Company, now bankrupt; Alfred Mudge & Company, since failed, and a business enterprise in Haverhill, in which Porter and Luke were partners.

President Luke was seen at his Beverly Farms home and made a general denial of Receiver Allen's charges. Other officers who could be found expressed themselves as surprised beyond measure at the charges of Mr. Allen, and made general refutations.

The Tenneyites will tackle a different brand of diamond goods to-day, when the first game with the St. Louis Cardinals will be played at the South End park.

It was some time ago that the Westerners were in the Hub, and they have managed to keep just a notch above the Beaneaters in the standing.

The present series will be an excellent chance for Tenney's men to rap the Cardinals a few and make their place unstable.

Cardinals That Are Missing.

While the team has not changed much since the last appearance, the absence of Charley Nichols will be noted, and Dave Brain will be missed from the infield.

Old Eagle Eye, Jake Beckley, is still stationed at first, and Captain Jimmy Burke is at the opposite corner.

Homer Smoot, one of the swiftest runners in the league; Shannon and Harry Arndt, comprise the outfield, and McBride, a new man, is covering shortstop.

As the Hub team beat the Cardinals two out of three in St. Louis on the Western trip, the outlook is good for a few more victories.

Cy Young or Willis will be the selection for to-day, according to the management, though they have worked hard during the week. It will be the third appearance of Young if he shows up, but he is expected to make up for the layoff he had a couple of weeks ago.

Either Egan or Brown is likely to be put in by the Cardinals, and they should be easy money for the home team.

The Reds got away with the last game with the Tenneyites by a small margin.

Odwell's Homer Did It.

The game was going the right way when the serenity of the contest was rudely broken up by a home run swat over the fence by Odwell, and he scored the man in front of him.

But the climax of the game was the greatest feature, and another triple play, the second in the series, was recorded.

Moran, the first up, got a two-bagger, and it looked like runs when Wilhelm bunched a bunt and Ewing tossed the ball to third and missed Moran, who went into the base in such a savage manner that he dislodged the sack.

Then came the unexpected. Batty hit to Corcoran, who tossed to Huggins, forcing Wilhelm. Moran tried to make home on the out, but was caught running back to third, and Batty made a break for second, but Steinfeldt shot the ball to Huggins and Batty was nipped. The score:

WRENN AND FINCKE WIN

Special to the Boston American.

ARDSLEY-ON-HUDSON, N. Y., July 15.—George L. Wrenn, Jr., and R. F. Fincke, the Country Club of Westchester pair, won the special doubles lawn tennis tournament on the courts of the Ardsley Casino. They came through the meeting, held under the direction of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, without the loss of a match.

The team to win the second honors was R. D. Little and R. Leroy, the Princeton-Columbia pair, who lost only one match in the series.

SHEPARD WON CHAMP.

NEW HAVEN, July 15.—William K. Shepard of the New Haven Country Club won the Connecticut golf championship by defeating P. H. Hovey of the Hartford Golf Club, 4 up and 2 to play over 36 holes.

The consolation cup was won by C. H. Zimmerman of the New Haven Country Club, who defeated R. S. White, 2d, also of the New Haven Country Club, 6 up 4 to play.

HOLCOMBE WARD, ONE OF COUNTRY'S BEST TENNIS PLAYER

Holcombe Ward and his partner, Beals C. Wright, both won their matches in the international singles for the Dwight F. Davis cup against the French players on Thursday. Yesterday they hooked up and won their match in the doubles against Decurgis and Germot, also French players. Brookes and Dunlop, the Australian players, conquered Von Wessely and Kinzl, of Austria. America won from France, 6—2, 6—2, 6—2, and Australia from Austria, 9—7, 6—2, 7—5. Wright and Ward completely outclassed their opponents. The Frenchmen could do no more with Wright's straight service than they could with Ward's difficult back stroke.

BROKE BIKE RECORD.

OGDEN, Utah, July 15. — W. E. Samuelson of Provo, Utah, has broken the world's bicycle record for a half mile, unpaced, professional, at the saucer track here. He covered the distance in 51 1-5 seconds. This is 1 2-5 seconds better than his own previous record of 52 3-5 seconds.

BIG STABLES ARRIVING AT NARRAGANSETT

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 15.—Narragansett Park has assumed a real racing air. Horses were streaming in the gates all day long, the stables were filling up, a hundred men were bustling about putting the finishing touches on the fine plant, and the turf microbe was in the air. Everyone talked of Monday's feature, the Rhode Island Handicap. What the Brooklyn and Suburban are to Gravesend and Sheepshead the Rhode Island is to Narragansett.

Horsemen agree that it is a most open race. Half a dozen candidates have worked so well and so nearly in the same notch that it is really difficult to separate them. That it will be a smashing fine race is now assured.

Among the arrivals yesterday were: Ed Peters, with Right and True; H. Booker, with The Bugaboo, a good winner at Buffalo, and others; Ed Whalen, with Barbuta, Lady Serene, Colonsa and Oaslacke; Johnny Weber, the former famous jockey, with six horses, the property of R. T. Wilson; the Helsen Stable, with fifteen; the Ashbury Stable, including Pythia, Hocus Pocus and the fast sprinter Jane Holly; Frank McCabe, with four; W. Davis, with two; J. L. Hayman, with Right Royal, Miss Point (the trim daughter of Jack Point) and the crack youngsters Sun Glow and Florence Hayman; J. W. Fuller, with Tokalon and others, and Charles A. Milholand, with forteen horses, including the Western winner Au Revoir and the five-times-straight winner Disabille.

The special trains from Buffalo to-day will bring down the following racing strings: S. Brown, John H. Phillips, W. Keating, W. Garth, J. W. Pangle, T. F. Coles, James Johnston, W. Y. Brinkworth, the Goughacres Stables, C. C. Smithson and W. E. French.

FAST MEN IN REVERE BIKE RACE TONIGHT

One of the best three-cornered bike battles behind pace is scheduled at the Revere track to-night, when Menus Bedell, Jimmy Moran and Will Stinson come together to decide the winner of the 25-mile journey.

The men are fit to ride in the fastest time that the track will allow, and the rivalry between them is intense.

Bedell, the New Yorker, makes his second appearance, and he claims that only an accident was responsible for losing him his first race here.

He will have his chance to-night to make good, and if he can put it on Moran, then his real ability will be recognized. He must also consider Stinson, as the big Cambridge rider won from him last week, and says that he will duplicate the feat.

Moran has not been seen for several weeks, and is anxious to show his Chelsea friends that he is still out for the championship of the pace followers.

In addition to the paced race there will be a ten-mile open for the amateurs and a five-mile exciting motor race for the pacemakers.

GALWAY A. C. IS AWARDED GAMES

The New England A. A. A. U. championships have been awarded to the Galway Athletic Club, and will be held at Combination Park, Medford, Saturday, August 5.

There will be an open trotting race of half-mile heats and a running horse race in addition to the track and field sports.

The management expects to have Hynes, the Irish runner, and John J. Joyce, the Irish-American A. C. runner, both of whom are now under suspension by the A. A. U., and A. C. Bowen, the old intercollegiate long distance runner, with others meet in the five-mile run. The entries for the games will close with Alfred Lill, Jr., No. 21 Bromfield street, Boston, July 31.

'GRIF' BORROWS 'DOC' POWERS

Special to the Boston American.

CLEVELAND, July 15.—Being in a bad way for backstops, Manager Griffiths of the New York Americans has made a deal with Connie Mack for the loan of Powers of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Kleinow's finger was smashed at Washington, and the Highlanders are in sore need of help behind the bat. When Kleinow recovers Powers will be returned to the Quaker City team.

First Baseman Chase of the Highlanders is also out of the game, his nose having been broken in practice.

HANLON LOSES PHIL LEWIS

Special to the Boston American.

BROOKLYN, July 15.—Manager Hanlon is again mourning the loss of his star shortstop, Phil Lewis.

Just where Lewis has gone and why no one seems to know. He was apparently satisfied with his lot on Wednesday, when the Brooklyns won so cleverly, but since then he has vanished, leaving behind no trace. Manager Hanlon is unable to give any explanation.

BUFFALO LEADER IS SUSPENDED

NEW YORK, July 15.—President P. T. Powers of the Eastern Baseball League telegraphed President Harry L. Taylor of the Buffalo Club that he had suspended Shortstop Nattress indefinitely and fined him $100, and fined Second-Baseman Laporte $100. Manager Stallings of the Buffalo team was suspended pending investigation. The action of President Powers followed trouble Thursday when Umpire Hassett was assaulted in the second inning of a game with Jersey City.

YOUNG AND GLADE ARE CARDED AT ST. LOUIS

Special to the Boston American.

ST. LOUIS, July 15.—"Cy" Young is carded by the Bostons in the second game of the series with the Browns. Opposed to him will probably be Fred Glade. It will be a case of "Hoodoo" against "Hoodoo" with the Glade "Hoodoo" a favorite.

Bill Dinneen was given a day off yesterday, because of his hard earned victory at Chicago, and he went down to the race track, expecting to gain more laurels.

Luck refused to break for the big twirler, until the last two races, when he finally managed to get on Tony Lepping at even money and Mammon at 2 to 1, quitting a little to the good in the battle with the "bookies."

Will Play Browns Monday.

By mutual agreement, the game between Boston and St. Louis scheduled for Tuesday will be played Monday, there being an open date on the schedule on the latter date. The vacancy was left in order to play off postponed games, but St. Louis and Boston have none. Boston desires to play a postponed game at Chicago Tuesday, so the fourth game here has been advanced to Monday.

Ban Johnson was still in St. Louis yesterday, despite his twice-announced intention to return to Chicago. What Johnson is doing here is a mystery. It is a cinch that he is not here for his health, and three days is a bit too long to take in arranging a fishing trip two months hence.

Johnson still insists that he has nothing on hand of importance, but he has always been a sphinx when putting through deals.

So far he has been in conference with the Washington, Boston and St. Louis officials, but nothing has developed to give a line on what he may be up to. He was in conference with Bosses Taylor and Collins, but all declined to talk.

Tom Jones May Play.

Tom Jones, according to Manager McAleer, may play in the present series. Jones has been at home, attending his wife, who came very near dying. In the event of Jones's return, he will take Frisk's place in the batting list.

The Champs lost the opening game here chiefly through errors. Barney Pelty, who always has been a tough proposition for the Champs, was in the box for the locals. Although he didn't have anything on George Winter, who was pitched by the Bostons, luck broke his way, and he won out, 5 to 2.

Jesse Burkett, the ex-Brownie, was the bright particular star of the day. He made two hits of the five registered by the Champs, besides playing a cracker-jack game in the left garden. Bobby Wallace shone with unusual effulgence for the Browns, and he was responsible for the inability of the Bostons to score more than a brace of tallies.

TENNEY ON NEXT SEASON'S TEAMS

That even Fred Tenney is in ignorance of the intention of the management of the Boston National team next year is seen by his comment on the subject.

Tenney says, "There are so many rumors going the rounds regarding the management of the Boston team next year when the new owners headed by Mr. Dunn take hold that one cannot even conjecture what the policy of the coming management will be."

"One thing I do know, however, and that nothing has been said to me on the subject of retaining my present position of manager for 1906, and I am not bothering my head about it. I have found no particular joy in managing a team this year. While the men have worked well for me and have not shirked in the least, the task of trying to land a good position has been extremely onerous and almost a fruitless one.

"We seem to be a little shy of having a first-class team and the little shortcomings has kept us battling with some degree of consistency in the second division. It would not take much to make our present team a strong one, but on account of the lateness of the season it would not do to make any radical changes now. I believe, though, that the new owners know exactly what is needed to build up the team into a winner next season and the material will be landed in plenty of time and will prove good experimental timber in places where we are weak. I expect to be with the Boston team next season, but in what capacity, whether manager, captain or private citizen, I do not know."

If Girls Are Modest on the Street They Are Always Safe

By Beatrice Fairfax

GIRLS, before you complain of men staring at you and trying to flirt with you, don't you think it would be a good idea to try a little self-examination and see if you haven't given them some encouragement.

Nine times out of ten you will find that the girl who is always being spoken to in the street is a good deal to blame.

I once knew a girl who never went out but what she came home with a tale of how this man had spoken to her, that man had stared at her and some other man had insulted her in some way or other.

One day I walked down Fifth avenue with her, and after that I never wondered at her stories.

If ever men received encouragement the men who looked at her did.

It may have been that she did it unconsciously, but she made eyes at every man we met.

Then, when the man returned the glance with interest, she was indignant.

Of course there are dozens of odious men—mashers, they are called—who cannot resist ogling every woman they meet, no matter how scant the encouragement they receive.

If you walk along the street as a modest, well-behaved girl should, attending to your own business, you will have little trouble from the men.

A pretty, neatly gowned girl will always attract a certain amount of attention.

Men will, of course, look at her.

But if she is modest in her demeanor their admiration will be most respectful.

A man can tell at a glance the girl with whom he may take liberties and the girl who would not permit it.

He may laugh and flirt with the former, but he will have no respect for her, and attention without respect means nothing at all.

When a man wants to meet a girl he will find some proper, legitimate way of doing so.

If his admiration is of the right sort he will not care to become acquainted through flirtation without introduction.

If a man's attention becomes unpleasant when you are walking in the street or riding on the Subway or elevated, move quietly away from him.

He will quickly see that his attentions are unwelcome and tire of the one-sided game.

But when you gaze at him with a baby stare of innocence, don't blame him if he concludes that he may be friendly.

You don't gaze into the eyes of every strange woman you meet.

Why, then, should you gaze at strange men?

It looks bold, girls, and it gives men a poor opinion of you.

There is nothing more charming than a modest-mannered young girl.

Hold yourself with dignity and modesty, and the admiration and attention that come to you will be all of the right kind.

I have seen a girl pass a group of young men and make eyes at them as she passed.

They smiled at her and winked at each other.

How would you like that?

Men will treat a girl according to her own standard.

If she behaves herself they will show her all respect; if she doesn't, they won't.

So you see it is all in your own hands.

MRS. OSBORN DESIGNS SIX CHARMING SUMMER DRESSES FOR THE WEE GIRLIE

THE wee maiden's frocks and frills are fluffy and bewildering this season as her mamma's or her big sister's. For midsummer wear almost any light material is suitable.

The gay little figures are marvels of muslin, ribbon and cunning needlework.

A charming frock of buff-colored batiste is trimmed with bands of pierced embroidery of the same shade, the waist being made with surplice effect. A sash of soft buff silk is knotted at the back.

Another dainty little creation is of white mull, the skirt a mass of fluffy ruffles.

The waist is made with a square neck, trimmed with white insertion and ruffles. Pale blue satin ribbon is run through the insertion at the neck and belt. For an older girl there is a smart frock of blue linen. Both skirt and waist are laid in knife pleats.

The yoke collar is edged with blue and white embroidery.

A serviceable frock for a girl of five is of pink linen, with pleated skirt and long waist, the latter trimmed with straps of white linen and crocheted buttons.

For dress-up occasions there is the cunningest frock of white Swiss that ever gladdened the heart of proud mamma or tiny maid.

It is trimmed with German valenciennes and pink satin ribbons. Pink socks and white sandals are worn with it.

HOW TO MANAGE YOUNG CHILDREN

IN too many households there are noisy, unruly, quarrelsome children, who make themselves a nuisance from morning till night.

Their parents look forward to the time when they can be put to bed and they may get rid of them, and yet who is more to blame for the condition of things than the parents themselves?

It is only children who have been sadly managed or carelessly brought up that make themselves a bugbear to their elders.

Of course, allowance must be made for difference in disposition. Still, when children are disagreeable and a nuisance, it is almost always because they are mismanaged.

When they are naturally inclined to be bad tempered and mischievous there is more need for them to be wisely managed.

Children that are delicate or ailing require a great deal of kindness, but a firm hand as well, or they will become unbearable cranks.

One very common reason why children are unruly is that they are deprived of things they ought to have and supplied with things they ought not to have. It is a life study to find out what is best to provide for the physical well-being and comfort of children.

How often is it the case that children are naughty because they are thirsty or hungry, or because they have been allowed to eat all day or been fed improper food.

Sleep is another very important factor in a child's life, and late hours bring about ill temper.

The sure way to spoil a child's disposition and temper is to give him a thing when he cries for it. It is a good rule to give a child willingly all that he asks for, as long as you know it is nothing that will hurt him.

Let a child once understand that father and mother will grant his wishes if they think it is reasonable and wise to do so, and you are sowing the seeds of reason and logic in the young mind, which will help him over many rough places in after years.

Be decisive with your children. When you say no mean it, and when you say yes or make a promise abide by it.

Children will soon learn that they may trust you, and that all the whining in the world will do them no good if you have given your word. You will inspire respect and confidence in them, and that is the secret of your influence over them. It lies with you to make them a burden to yourself and all with whom they come in contact or to encourage in them by such good training the qualities that will help to make life pleasant for them and their friends and companions through life.

"THE Mary that m'sieu so often spoke about in his illness—eh, Mary and—that ugly name Judith. Oh, m'sieu, do tell me who that Mary is. I am consumed with curiosity. M'sieu can surely trust me. I am not of m'sieu's world. And the other—this Judith Mort? Ugh: I am sure it is an evil woman who has such a name. Am I not right, m'sieu?"

"I am sure I don't know about what you are talking," answered Stephen impatiently. "How should I?"

The pretty little Frenchwoman shook her head and laughed aloud.

"M'sieu is discovered," she said playfully. "I have read m'sieu's secret.

Denial Is Useless."

"You foolish child!" said the man reprovingly. "What are you talking about? What secret have you discovered—eh? Come, do not be so stupid, Sunbeam. Tell me more news. You say you read this in the newspaper?"

"Oui, m'sieu."

"An American newspaper?"

"Oh, but no, I cannot read those absurd American newspapers. This was in Le Petit Marseillaise."

"Will you let me see the paper?"

"Certainly, m'sieu." Her eyes gleamed with impish amusement. "I will go and get the paper. It is in my room. And there is other news in the paper about the Seafoam and the rich American people."

"Other news?"

"Yes, M'sieu. There is to be a bal masque on board the yacht to-night. It will be most amusing for those lucky people, n'est-ce pas?"

"Most amusing," said Stephen grimly.

"Though the beautiful Mademoiselle Armstrong will not have her lover with her."

"Why?"

"He has gone to America."

"Indeed!"

"Neither will the millionaire father of mademoiselle be there, for he, too, has gone. These Americans always have so much business—is it not so, m'sieu? That is why they are all so serious and dull—like m'sieu." She laughed with insolent challenge.

"So Armstrong has gone to America," said Stephen, half to himself. "That is strange." He looked up suddenly into the laughing eyes of Soeur Marie. "Get the paper, ma'mselle," he said. "Will you be so good?"

"With all the pleasure in the world," she answered, rising and tripping lightly along the balcony.

Stephen groaned and staggered to his feet.

"My God," he muttered thickly, deep down beneath his breath; "she has not waited long! So she is going to marry Dick — Dick, of all people in the wide world. It is incredible—impossible!"

He stared gloomily down to the harbor, where Armstrong's beautiful floating palace lay gleaming white and gold in the sunlight.

"I wonder if she ever gives me a thought now," he mused. "I wonder. And so she is going to marry old Dick——"

"Voila le journal, m'sieu," said Nurse Marie, breaking in upon his gloomy meditations. "M'sieu will read all the news in the paper. And, if m'sieu likes, I will purchase him an American newspaper when I go out this afternoon."

"Ever so many thanks, Sunbeam," said Stephen, "but I think I shall go out myself this afternoon."

"You, m'sieu?" she exclaimed incredulously. "But what will the doctors say?"

"They have already given me permission," he answered.

"I Am Cured.

I am free to stay for another week or go at any time I like."

"Oh, no, no, m'sieu!" cried Nurse Marie. "You are not yet strong enough. I will not hear of it. It is monstrous. It is brutal!"

The man laughed at her indignation.

"My dear girl," he exclaimed, "I can't stay here forever, can I? Don't you think I have been a big enough tax upon your as it is?"

Tears welled up in Soeur Marie's pretty eyes.

"Won't you ever come back, m'sieu?" she faltered.

"You surely don't want me to be ill again, do you, Sunbeam?"

"Yes, I do," she said fiercely.

"What?"

"Oh, I don't mean that!" she stammered, almost incoherently. "But I—I—oh, I don't want you to go away yet. You are not well enough, m'sieu. I know you are not well enough."

"The doctor says I am."

"Bah! The doctor is an imbecile!" she cried, furiously. "You are too weak, m'sieu. No, no; I protest. Please be wise, m'sieu. Oh please don't go! I want you to stay."

"You are a dear, kind, good little lady," said Stephen; "and I shall miss you, Sunbeam, far more than you'll ever miss me."

"No you won't," she retorted angrily. "You'll forget all about me five minutes after you've left the hospital."

"Never!" exclaimed Stephen gallantly. "Never—all my life!"

"Where are you going, m'sieu?"

"I don't know yet," answered Stephen thoughtfully. "It depends on several things."

"But I shall never know?" She struggled hard to keep back her tears. Her pretty lips quivered.

"Look here, Sunbeam," said Stephen, "I'll promise you that I'll let you know. There!"

"Oh, m'sieu!"

"And write you picture postcards, too."

"M'sieu is too good," she cried radiantly. "And may I write, too?"

"Why, certainly, if you care to."

"I shall write every day," she declared boldly, "and often twice a day."

Stephen looked grave. He was not at all sure whether he was not promising something which would be out of his power to fulfil. However, he owed too much to the warm-hearted and excitable little French nurse to refuse her such a small request. Indeed, his own feelings prompted it, too. She had been a real friend to him and a dear companion at a time when he most wanted both. She had held his hand as he had descended into the dark valley of the shadow; she had done perhaps more than the doctors to fight for his worthless life and bring him back from the very grave itself to life and health and strength.

Yes, he would be very sorry to leave Soeur Marie; he would miss her more than he could tell.

"M'sieu," she said, with a sudden excess of gravity, "will you

Promise Me One Thing?"

"If it is within my power, Sunbeam," he said.

"Then, m'sieu, promise me that you will not leave Marseilles to-day."

"Why?"

"Ask no questions, m'sieu, but promise."

The man thought a few seconds before answering her. After all, why should he not give the seemingly easy promise? He did not see how he could leave Marseilles to-day, in any case. Indeed, his plans were very chaotic; he did not even know whether he would leave the hospital to-day or not. He could, if he wished, stay on for another week, though that was certainly not his intention.

"Will you promise, m'sieu?"

"Yes, I'll promise," he said suddenly.

"A million thanks, m'sieu!"

Stephen leaned over the balcony and gazed gloomily down at the Seafoam. Strange, wild thoughts coursed through his brain, and an unconquerable desire filled him—a desire to look on Mary's sweet face once more.

It was a mad thought, and he knew it. Whenever he allowed himself to face the extraordinary position he realized his great danger; but the thought of her being so near, within touch, as it were, within call, drove him to a kind of madness. He wanted to see her; he wanted to hear her dear voice again—once again before he went away forever, and the memory of her would be but as the memory of some far-off dream of paradise.

CHAPTER CXXVIII.

The Mysterious Monk.

THE fancy dress ball on board the yacht Seafoam gave promise of being a most conspicuous success.

Impromptu invitations were sent out by hand to all the friends of the Armstrongs in Marseilles and the immediate neighborhood, and young Neil proved himself invaluable. In fact, he and Mary Armstrong between them practically arranged the whole entertainment. Mrs. Armstrong was only too willing to relegate her position as hostess to her daughter, though she consented most reluctantly to appear at the ball in her "Queen Bess" costume.

"I'm simply going as a plain and simple Pierrette," said Mary. "I'm much too busy to think out anything original. Besides, there is no time."

"I'm going as Napoleon," laughed Neil, "and I shall simply stagger you all. 'Le petit corporal,' that's all!"

"Masks to be worn till midnight," suggested Mrs. Leon Kirke.

"Quite so," agreed Neil, as master of the ceremonies.

"And afterwards, if necessary," suggested Judith Mort. "Please insist on that, Mr. Neil."

"As you will," laughed the soldier; "but I hope it won't be necessary."

"It's half the fun," retorted Judith. "I shan't tell you what I'm going to be."

"I can guess, dear lady," put in Mr. Leon Kirke. "Ah, I know your secret! I happen to be great friends with Alphonse Mollet in the Rue Noailles."

"Well, don't tell anyone," laughed Judith, who had arranged a costume with M. Mollet that afternoon.

"Mum's the word. I appear as Anthony. Be my Cleopatra, I pray thee, dear lady."

"Hush," whispered Judith, "not a word."

"There will be over two hundred if everyone turns up!" exclaimed Neil later on. "It will be the biggest thing we've had."

"How many to dinner?" asked Mrs. Armstrong, anxiously.

"Sixty-five," answered Neil. "The rest are invided from ten till—well, just when we are all tired. It will be great fun.

Mary Armstrong, despite her thoughts, entered thoroughly into the spirit of the thing. True daughter of her father, she realized that her first duty was to her guests. Her heart might be racked with anxiety and suspense; but, under no circumstances, must she show her feelings to the world.

"Mary is singularly lively," they said—they wo did not know and could not see below the surface.

"One would not think that she grieves much for Captain Menzies," said another. "She is so full of life and fun! she is alone.

A Changed Being."

But Mary Armstrong, in her heart, longed for the whole wearying function to be over and done with. In herself she knew that she was quite out of harmony with it all, and that, though she laughed and joked and entered into all the hundred and one plans of the enthusiastic Neil, her thoughts were very far away, and she would, if she had consulted her own taste, much have preferred to be laone.

A large instalment of "Scaret Lies" will be printed in to-morrow's BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

If You're in Trouble Here's Help for You

By Rev. Albert E. George

UNDER this head, the Rev. Mr. George will gladly advise all who are in any manner of trouble. All letters will be answered as promptly as possible, and will be treated in absolute confidence. Write him if you are in need of aid in solving any of the little difficulties, domestic, marital or legal.

EDITOR TROUBLE COLUMN:

Won't you please tell me if there is any way I can gain my husband's love? I have been married ten years and have two children who should be brought up under the care of both their father and mother, but my husband leaves it all to me. He neglects all three of us, and does not seem to care about his home, wife or children. I have reason to believe that he is in love with another woman. Who it is I do not know, but there is something that keeps him away all the time. He gives us very little money and spends it somewhere else. He is a temperate man and does not gamble, so I know his money is not spent in those channels.

A SORROWING WIFE.

Malden.

THE way to gain a husband's love under such circumstances as you represent is to make home pleasant and comfortable. Be kind and considerate of his wants. Let the children greet him affectionately when he comes home, and in the home life.

A man is conquered by kindness. To show that you feel his treatment by any act of yours either in the way of not saying much to him while he is home or by resenting his peculiar action is sure to harden him in his indifference.

After you have been kind, gentle and loving with him, of all of which he may be unworthy, take him aside and talk reasonably with him. Ask him if he thinks it is right to neglect his home, and give so little toward the general expenses.

Tell him that you think somebody must be claiming his attention, and indicate your willingnes to do everything in your power to make him happy and contented with his home. If he is anything of a man he will yield to your gentle remonstrances. Many a man is tempted to do wrong because his home-life is not made attractive.

If he still persists in acting heartlessly toward you, write to me again, and I will call your attention to a severer measure

EDITOR TROUBLE COLUMN:

I am a young girl twenty-two years old and am in love with a young fellow who I have known since childhood. My father objects to our being married simply because he does not like this young man. He is a steady fellow and earning twenty dollars a week. I am not ashamed to say I love him very much and want to marry him.

Will you kindly tell me if you think father has any right to stand between his daughter and her future happiness, when in reality he has nothing against this young man, except personal animosities? Would it be wrong for me to marry him quietly? Should a father interfere with his daughters in their love matches when the young men they choose are respectable and honest and capable of supporting them?

TROUBLED.

Dorchester.

A YOUNG woman, deeply in love with a young man, as I infer you are, should have every encouragement.

Love is blind. If you are perfectly sure there is nothing against him, and that he is really earning twenty dollars a week, there is an additional encouragement that you should marry him.

It is not wise to go against your father's wishes. Can you not use some strategy in getting the young man and your father together? People have wrong impressions of each other when they are not well acquainted. If they could only know each other better, personal animosities would pass away.

Do not act hastily. Use every means to gain your father's permission. If he still is deaf to your entreaties and the young man still maintains his good record, and really loves you, and you think you will be happy with him, you are justified in marrying him quietly.

A father has a right to go so far with his objections. When they are unreasonable, they stop there. No father should interfere with the matrimonial prospects of his daughter, especially when the objections are trivial.

But above all, be sure you know the young man well, and that he is all he represents himself to be. Then the coast is clear, and you are justified in doing what I said above.

GOOD LOOKS AND APPETITE

TOO many women sacrifice good looks to appetite.

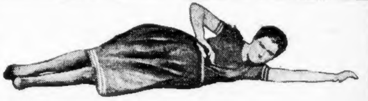
The woman who would have a nice skin and a clear complexion must be even more careful in the choice of the food she eats than in the gowns she wears.

Stoutness and thinness are both very often caused by errors in diet, and a sallow and rough condition of the skin may arise from the self-same cause.

Light, easily digested food, avoidance of highly spiced and seasoned dishes, pickles and pastry, the substitution of milk or cocoa for tea, coffee and alcoholic drinks, with fresh air and exercise, will do much toward promoting a clear skin and maintaining a look of youthfulness.

Women forget that the stomach is the furnace of the body, and that it must not only have proper fuel, but that it must not be clogged with useless matter.

It's Your Own Fault If You Can't Swim



This photograph shows the correct breast stroke.

Final Easy Lesson in Series Written by an Expert

By William Rowe

(Swimming Instructor at L Street Bath)

LESSON VI.

WHEN a woman has become thoroughly acquainted with all the strokes and movements described in the last five lessons it is only a question of time and practice when she shall become an expert swimmer.

A beginner should never attempt to save another's life in the water, for it is practically an impossibility to rescue a drowning person, unless one is an expert swimmer.

The sixth lesson should be spent in reviewing the breast stroke separately and then with the leg movement, in practicing the side stroke and in floating.

If the learner has advanced rapidly, has a great deal of confidence and assurance, a lesson in diving might be given. One of the most delightful sensations one can have in the water comes from diving.

In learning to dive, the head should be drawn slightly down toward the chest, the arms stretched forward on a level with the breast—not raised above the head.

The knees should be bent a trifle and an oblique plunge should be made, taking care not to keep the body too stiff.

A few general rules should be remembered by all women learning to swim.

Always swim parallel with the shore insted of swimming away from it.

If learning to swim at a beach don't go out on a raft when the tide is coming in and stay there a long time and jump off expecting to find the same depth of water as there was when you went out.

Always follow the instructions of the life guards; they are not at the beaches for ornaments.

Do not keep corsets on while swimming. This is a very foolish and unhealthful habit.

In case there is a forewarning of the approach of cramp by the contraction or stiffening of the muscles, turn upon the back and relax all the muscles. After resting a while paddle toward the shore.

No woman who can swim tolerably and who has an ounce of pluck and a little common sense need grow alarmed at a cramp in the arm or leg.

THE PAPER THAT'S "DIFFERENT"

TEARS COME TO LAWSON'S EYES IN ALBERT LEA

People Give Him a Testimonial for Work Against "System" and Monopoly.

CHICAGO WILL HEAR HIM

CHICAGO, July 15.—After making one of the most sensational speech making tours a millionaire ever made in the United States, flaying the "system," roasting Standard Oil and exciting the people of the West to action against monopolies, Thomas W. Lawson of Boston is on his way back to the Hub.

To-night Mr. Lawson will be the guest of the Jefferson Club at its banquet, and at the close will start for Boston. He is on his way from Albert Lea, Minn., where the people gave him the most stirring reception he ever had.

Mr. Lawson was the principal speaker at the meeting of the Chautauqua assembly, and about 4,000 persons heard him. He gave practically his Ottawa speech, and was loudly applauded.

As he sat down Major S. C. Edwards, editor of a local paper, arose and on behalf of the people of Albert Lea, presented Mr. Lawson with a handsome hand printed souvenir book, containing a testimonial to Mr. Lawson. As he handed it to the Boston millionaire, he said, the people of the West meant everything the testimonial says. Tears came to Lawson's eyes, and he was unable to make a response.

The book is a handsome piece of work. It is printed on Japanese vellum, and is bound in the richest possible leather. The lettering is highly illuminated and entirely hand work. There are also several water colors of scenes about Albert Lea. The book fits into a solid, carved cherry case.

The text of the book is:

"We desire to express to you, even in degree, our high appreciation of your achievement in placing in the public pillory certain Pharisees who have claimed as their divine right the pursuit of the life, liberty and happiness of other people.

"This beneficent service which you have rendered humanity in showing us how we have been robbed by indirection and flayed Marsyus-like by the right oblique, could only have been accomplished by a man of courage, tact, high resolve, artistic expression and a prophetic insight into the heart of things, all of which you certainly possess. You have faced, as did St. George, the dragon alone, and while you have not killed that inquitious thing, the system, you certainly have scorched it, and it is now merely taking the count.

"Sir, we seek not to separate you from us by working your apotheosis, but we greet you as a man, a man of power, an enlightened egotist, who benefits himself by benefiting others. We ask you to accept our high faith, our gratitude, our profound esteem, and with the earnest wish that as opposition and obstacles have not been able to silence your batteries, so may your craft never be becalmed by too much prosperity.

"Albert Lea, Minn., July 14, 1905."

After attending the banquet here tonight Mr. Lawson and party will start on their return to Boston. They are due to arrive there at 6:50 Monday night.

AUTO UPSETS AND INJURES 3 AT CONWAY

C. Jerome Edwards Drives Machine Into Swift River Bridge While Racing.

ONE IS SERIOUSLY HURT

CONWAY, N. H., July 15.—C. Jerome Edwards of Brookline and his guest J. R. Rorke of Detroit, an officer of the Cadillac Auto Company, are in Conway hospital recovering from injuries received by the upsetting of their auto at the bridge over Swift river.

Mr. Rorke probably has concussion of the brain, while Mr. Edwards, who was running the machine, is bruised about the head and body. N. W. Newton, a Brooklyn newspaper man with the party, was cut and bruised.

The men are among those contesting for the trophy offered by Charles J. Glidden of Boston to the Automobile Association of America. The accident resulted from a friendly speed contest between Mr. Edwards and Carl Page. Mr. Page had been leading the run when he stopped to take on water. Mr. Edwards passed him. Mr. Page decided to overtake him and put on speed. He passed Mr. Edwards and got through the narrow bridge over the Swift when Mr. Edwards's auto, coming around a sharp curve, crashed into one of the beams of the bridge and turned upside down.

Mr. Rorke struck his head against a beam and became unconscious. Mr. Edwards and Mr. Newton were also thrown to the bridge. They were taken to Dr. Thorne's home and ordered removed to Conway Hospital. Mr. Page returned and helped clear the wrecked auto off the bridge. Examination showed it is not badly damaged. Mr. Edwards will probably continue his trip.

CAR LEAVES TRACK, 3 HURT

EAST BROOKFIELD, July 15.—Three passengers were injured and about thirty badly shaken up and frightened by the derailing of a car of the Warren, Brookfield & Spencer Street Railway Company on Holland Hill.

The injured are Miss Clara Nelson, sixteen, badly bruised about face and body, Miss Elsie Stratton, injuries to left shoulder and Henry Hanbury, aged forty-six, of North Brookfield, two ribs broken and a bad scalp wound. The motorman, Edward Moreau, was badly shaken up.

The accident was caused by spreading of the rails, that it was not more serious is due to the caution with which Motorman Moran was running his car.

GREAT DAMAGE DONE CHURCHES BY LIGHTNING

New Old South and Eliot Congregational Struck During Heavy Storm.

MANY PERSONS STUNNED

Two Boston churches were struck by lightning, four members of the family of Joseph Rose at Nos. 1 and 3 Lindell place were shocked, flagpoles splintered and buildings damaged in the severe thunder storm which passed over Eastern Massachusetts.

The Eliot Congregational Church in Roxbury was badly damaged. The steeple was struck and burned down to the belfry. Lightning struck one of the small spires on the tower of the New Old South Church at the corner of Dartmouth and Boylston streets, and damaged the vestry. Valuable paintings and other works of art were ruined, the plastering torn from the walls and other damage done.

From the South Shore come reports of severe lightning. A Braintree schoolhouse was destroyed by fire caused by lightning, and in Quincy William Slaunwhite, a painter living at Hough's Neck, was stunned. Miss Margaret Conway of Medford street, Charlestown was prostrated by a bolt, which struck an electric car in which she was riding.

None of the persons stunned by the storm is in serious condition.

Telephone communication was suspended during the storm, and many lines were burned out. The electric railway companies also suffered damage from lightning. The rain fell in torrents at the height of the storm, and many washouts have been reported.

Mrs. Grace Patenaude of New York was found dead during the storm in the gutter on Grove street, Medford, by a policeman. On her clothing was found a package of morphine tablets. She was lately released from McLean Asylum. It is thought she committed suicide before the storm.

A crowd standing about the Maverick square entrance to the East Boston tunnel were stunned by a bolt of lightning that struck a flagpole on a building nearby, sending a shower of splinters down to the street. A peculiar prank was played by the lightning at the corner of Boylston and Washington streets, where a telephone pole was struck. The electrical fluid played up and down the wires between two poles, jumped across the street and back, and kept a crowd awe-stricken for almost fifteen minutes.

ALEXANDER'S MIND SAID TO BE AFFECTED

Collapse of Former President of the Equitable Under Strain of Scandal.

NEW DIRECTORS CHOSEN

NEW YORK, July 15.—James W. Alexander, former president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, has completely collapsed as a result of the strain he has been under on account of the Equitable scandal, and is now in a retreat on Long Island in charge of two physicians. Mr. Alexander's mind has been weakened, it is said, and grave doubts of his recovery are entertained.

Mr. Alexander's illness has been aggravated by the return of a kidney and bladder complaint which he thought he was rid of five years ago. His friends were shocked to-day at the report that his mind had failed him. At his advanced age an affliction of this kind, they fear, will have fatal consequences.

A high officer of the Equitable Society said: "Three or four weeks before Mr. Alexander severed his connection with the society I saw what was coming. He acted like a dazed man, and it was clear that his mind was affected by all the trouble and worry he had been through. He acted like a broken man, and I knew then that the collapse was not far off.

Senator Depew, it is reported, has also been physically affected by the scandal. Friends who have seen him in Paris say that he looks ten years older than when he sailed from New York.

Twelve new directors have been selected for the Equitable by the trustees, Grover Cleveland, Justice O'Brien and George Westinghouse. They include Wallace L. Pierce of Boston and Hon. Charles E. Littlefield of Maine.

Which Is Worse—

To Have No Vote, or to Have a Vote Without Using It Intelligently

A reader asks, "What was the speech of John Bright to which you allude in an editorial about building palaces for Ambassadors?"

The speech was made at Birmingham in 1859, when that very fine human being, John Bright, was trying to drive into the heads of Englishmen the idea that they ought to vote and control their own affairs.

He began his speech by saying: "Men of Birmingham—if I can call you men who do not possess the suffrage."

This is one of the many speeches by John Bright to which the English people are much indebted.

We are inclined to think that some John Bright might make a similar speech to the men of America at this time.

He could not say to them that they have no suffrage, but he might well ask them:

"Can I call you men who have the vote and don't know how to use it effectively?"

We have travelled a long distance from the days when the friends of liberty believed, in their pathetic ignorance, that all the world's problems and troubles would be solved by giving to every man the right to vote.

We have learned, to our sorrow, that there is no short road to good government; that there is no panacea for the political and other human ills except EDUCATION and TIME.

You may give the monkeys of Africa a perfect set of tools and supplies. But they will not manufacture guns or automobiles.

And you can give to the mass of human beings all the political tools —the vote, the law-making power, with initiative, referendum and recall thrown in, if you will—and they won't manufacture over night a perfect political system.

In America millions of men, nearly all able to read and write, have the right to vote.

And these millions of men are really not represented at all, except very indirectly, in the government of the country.

Parties and party bosses do their governing for them. A few rich men own the lawmakers and control the laws.

Hereditary control of the laws has been abolished and financial control substituted.

The man with a ballot doesn't spend any time thinking what he can do, or what he ought to do, with that ballot.

If the ordinary citizen is going to have his buggy repainted, or invest a thousand dollars, he gives more thought to that painting job, or to that investment, than he ever gave to politics in all his life.

The men of this country will really be called men when they shall have learned to use intelligently the ballot, for which the race has fought and suffered so much.

A man's vote simply expresses the quantity and quality of his education, the intelligence of his thought.

Until he understands what he is voting for, until he knows something about history, about the world's story of corruption and clique government, he will not use the ballot much better than a monkey would use a turning lathe.

Mr. Depew's Advice

It Was Pretty Well Paid for at $20,000 a Year

Our readers will remember that the Hearst newspapers did what they could to keep Chauncey Depew from representing the State of New York in the United States Senate.

We believed, and we said, that he was not a fit man to represent the State or to assist in making laws intended to control corporations.

Our attitude at that time toward Mr. Depew was severely attacked and criticised.

Probably some of the other newspapers now take our view as to the propriety of making the servant of a big corporation the people's representative in Congress.

In one specific instance Mr. Depew has now been found out.

It was unpleasant to attack him before; it is equally unpleasant to attack him now. He is an old man, and there is a good deal to be said on his side.

The American people really did not deserve from him much more consideration than he gave them. They laughed at his jokes and accepted him as a great man, although he had been for years the professional paid lobbyist of the Vanderbilts and, subsequently, their servile employe.

We have no special desire to throw stones at a man whose measure has been taken by the revelations in the Equitable scandal.

Mr. Depew got a big salary from the pockets of the Equitable policyholders. He says that he "gave advice" in return for his salary. Among other things, he advised the company to lend to himself $250,000 on a bankrupt concern that never paid.

Such advice as that seems to have been pretty well paid for.

But the mere fact that Mr. Depew took $20,000 from the Equitable every year, and the other fact that, in return for the salary, he voted to lend the policyholders' money to a bankrupt concern of his own, is not the worse thing against him.

Dishonesty in money matters is bad enough. But that is not as bad as the betrayal of the people in a law-making capacity.

We opposed the election of Depew to the Senate BECAUSE HE DID NOT OWN HIMSELF.

We declared him unfit to make laws for the American people because he was owned by, and would represent, the Vanderbilt railroad interests.

It is that fact which makes him unfit to sit in the Senate now. Evidence of the fact that he has taken the Equitable policyholders' money could not materially increase his unfitness.

From the numerous editors that denounced us because we told the truth about Depew we should like to hear at present their real opinions concerning him.

MRS. BUG—George, dear, don't forget to bring home a lawn mower.

MISS BUG—Oh, if I only had a shoehorn!

CATERPILLAR—Say, lend me a couple of seeds. I must buy a cocoon for our new kittenpillar.

Vivisection in Our Own Land Should Be Stopped Before We Attempt to Christianize the Heathen

A MEDICAL student subjected a cat to horrible torture in th name of Science and then wrote a detailed account of it his fiancee. The young woman very sensibly broke her en gagement. Then the young man tried to commit suicide.

It is to be hoped that his remorse will not induce th young woman to relent in her decision. No such ma should become the father of any good woman's childre There is a vein of cruelty and a love of inflicting pain him which ought not to be transmitted.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Herbert Ward have adde still greater lustre to their brilliant names by sending fort an earnest appeal to all thinking people.

May the cry go far and stir the heart of the thoughtless but really kin world, until concerted action removes this awful block from the path true progress.

Here is the appeal:

To Authors and Journalists

WE wish to ask your attention to what Lord Shaftesbury called "the sad subject" of vivisection. The abuses of this practice are many, merciless and increasing. A humane protest against them is taking form and power—more slowly in this country than in Great Britain, where restrictive laws have existed for over twenty years.

We have given many years to the study of this matter and can speak of it intelligently. Few moral crusades so deserve sympathy and sacrifice as that for which we speak.

Yet no one of them is so hindered by a massive popular ignorance as to the piteous facts of the case and the supreme claims of the cause.

It is partly with the hope of reducing this ignorance that it has been thought best to appeal to those who lead thought, and create it.

One of our own guild—our strong essayist, Agnes Repplier—has said: "Vivisection is only possible because the world—so merciful, but so careless—cannot endure to learn what vivisection means."

Browning was an ardent, fearless and faithful opponent of the cruelties involved in the practice. Tennys has scathed vivisectors without mer Mark Twain has held vivisection the abhorrence and the ridicule of day. Whittier and Phillips Broo were with us in their great hear Howells and Mrs. Howe and Mary Wilkins have signed our petitions the regulation of this practice by la The literary conscience has alrea stirred toward the painful question

The press is not yet nobly a widely aroused to the subject, but aware and observant of it. That fo of omnipotence which we always a knowledge, and often respect—t power which can set nations at w or at peace, if it will—could in o year make scientific cruelty in American laboratory so disgrace that it would die of shame.

It is to editors and journalists th we appeal with most earnestness a most hope. This question is fund mental to the ethics of education, a to medical morality. We ask you study it as closely as you can, for v are sure that you will not refuse yo influence to a movement which see to check cruelty and daunt brutali "for pity's sake."

I AM in receipt of a chain letter asking me to write five more to induc people to give money, and thought, and prayer, to increase the numbe of foreign missionaries.

It is impossible for me to feel an interest in the spreading of th orthodox Christian Gospel abroad when I see it producing, or allowing, suc monstrous cruelty as exists in our land to-day under the cloak of science i this torturing process of vivisection.

Until we can illustrate in our own land that Christianity means kindness, protection and love for all God's creatures I do not feel that we have right to force its precepts upon other nations.

As long as any church allows the physicians and scientists who advocate vivisection to be members in good standing, as long as clergymen rais no voice of protest against this evil we should be ashamed to send missionaries to "convert" the heathen to our methods of conduct.

All life is from God. We have no right to torture any living thing i hope of saving some other living thing from suffering. There are highe and safer and truer methods of serving humanity. The day will come whe the vivisector will be regarded as in the same category as the torturer o the Spanish inquisition.

And the time will come when the man, however able mentally to conduct the affairs of a nation, will not be considered by the people if he slaughters animals for pastime.

Wail of the Trusts

By James J. Montague

ELIHU! Oh, Elihu!
What are we ever going to do?
When we lost Dill we thought we still
Had you!
What chance have we to get away
With grafting game or sure thing play
Without a counsellor like you?
Oh! Much lamented Elihu!

Elihu! Oh, Elihu!
Pray what does Roosevelt need of you?
He can't get haled to court or jailed
For anything that he may do.
He don't sell people poisoned food,
Or stock that isn't any good,
And trust to luck to pull him through,
To luck, plus you, oh, Elihu!

Elihu! Oh, Elihu!
Pray tell us not that you have flew.
Tom Lawson knocks our watered stocks
And says things that, alas! are true!
He says that we, respected men,
Should all be herded in the pen;
We rather fear we shall be, too,
Unless you help us, Elihu!

Elihu! Oh, Elihu!
Unless you kindly pull us through,
Our high finance will stand a chance
Of getting its unlooked-for due.
You'll find your job too strenuous
We hope, and soon come back to us.
Oh! save your trusting pirate crew
Before they get us, Elihu!
